This frequency distribution must either be assumed over the binary outcome, or be assumed over the data and its consequences simulated for example. Carlos Ungil and I hashed that out quite a bit at one point. And, as always, all of these books are included for the interest of their approach or subject matter as it relates to landscape, spatial sciences, and the built environment more generally.

However, Chaz is so paranoid that he is seized by a sudden fear that she might return. But we should thus also be able to predict that certain forthcoming landscape-scale events—the permanent flooding of the New York City subway system, say, or Floridian landfills fatally overcome by rising tides—will also come with more or less known epidemiological side-effects. I will take it as an invitation to give you the first step – only the first step, not the complete argument – and see if you can come this far with me. South Florida Water Management District. Deciding what model to use based on misspecification tests is some kind of model selection, so it may bias inference that is made in case of passing misspecification tests.
