Because Das Man has no true, deep, or real rapport with the world, everything he sees or interacts with remains undisclosed to. Therefore, mind can know nothing more than. This is because a man can be himself as he truly is; as he imagines himself to be; and as other people view . In other words, he has become a mental and ultimately technological creature. In the year when he was thirty eight, he published his ideas in his treatise entitled Sein und Zeit, or "Being and Time. Business Writing Skills. If that rapport is dulled or dampened, taken casually and flippantly, and if we merely function passively and carelessly, there can be no authentic declaration of personal uniqueness. This means that most human beings are subconsciously threatened by aspects of existence. How did the concept of immortality arise? Why are the answers to questions about existence so elusive?
